The Eaturday Evening Post as a

ource of dramatic supply has blurted into the new theatrical season at the first gun. George Broadhurst last night opened his theatre with a farce of negro life founded on the stories which Octavus Roy Cohen contributes to that fruitful weekly. All the characters in have gone to Spring Lake, N. J., for the the three acts were negro-the programme called them "colored," probably in deference to the wide variety of shades which their complexious showed. They were acted by "white players" who in the pursuance of their artistic duties ranged from weak cafe as last to deep chocolate in tint, with an occasiona lapse into cold gravy, which was the skin affected chiefly by the men. The lovers-imagine a playwright so naive as to think that the public would interest itself in the love affairs of such characters-ran to the palest tones of > Mr. Cohen's play passes in the drawing room of a negro family. Whether this house was situated in the North or South was not revealed. The intrigue of the story concerned a plot to purchase a by pawning a diamond wedding ring This theme was not without its amusing omplications. There were twists and urns that finally brought the ring back to the woman who owned it and was altogether ignorant that her own husband had helped to make way with it. In these omplications of the story lay its humor. There was little or no effort to draw the un of the scenes from the character of the negro. This is of course a fertile source of humor, but it was all but unouched last night.

Monotony is the greatest peril in play dealing altogether with one race. "Come Seven" began to pall on the listeners during the second act. Then it became evident that the negro as such was not meant to be the real cause of the play's power to entertain. Exraneous fun was to be added to situathan the pieces written for amateurs in which all the characters have the chance to black up.

Miss Lucille La Verne has played negro character before and she was the one realistic figure among the women. She was a laundress with a shiftless husband and she made her role a genuine bit of characterization. Arthur Aylesworth made another amusing type of the lazy husband, but he was addicted occasionally to the devices of burdies dicted occasionally to the devices of burdies the good and character that the remainer of the musical stage and did more than any of the other actors to create the constant impression that there was likely to be music—and jazz at that—at any minute. Miss Gail Kane, who was an obvious absurdity. None of the other actors was distinguished and there was a plentiful lack of real negro dialect in the talk. Prelate Not Worried-Ex- Miss de Milhau Will Chase Southampton Speeders.

> Special to THE SUN AND NEW YORK HERALD. SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., July 19 .- Miss Zella de Milhau, wearer of the Croix de Guerre and an artist before and since she drove an ambulance for the French army in the war zone, astonished her friends in the summer colony to-day by becoming a full fledged motorcyčie cop -without pay. Miss de Milhau is stopping here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis J. de Milhau of 1022 Park venue, New York.

The young woman learned recently that the Southampton authorities were looking for someone who was willing to be a cop for the pleasure to be got out of riding a fast motorcycle, wearing a uniform and occasionally chasing speed-ers and arresting them. The roads were infested with speeding motor cars and something had to be done. She went right out and got the job for herself. She was sworn in to-day.

Miss de Milhau equipped the am-bulance given to the Allies by the townsfolk here and went abroad with it in 1916. Before that she had worked in the British War Office.
